NEED

Florida's agriculture, natural resources, and related food industries contribute nearly $150 billion annually to the state's economy and remain one of the most economically impactful industry sectors in Florida. With the world population expected to exceed 9 billion by 2050, meeting the food and fiber needs of an evergrowing population around the globe is a serious and imminent challenge. Current programs are only able to provide half of the employment needed to meet agriculture's growing workforce demands. Additionally, the shortage of agricultural scientists worldwide has reached a critical level.

HOW

Agricultural education programs in Florida's middle and high schools are a key link in stimulating student interest in agriculture and a proven mechanism for connecting talented high school students to academic and career opportunities in the agricultural sciences. However, the capacity of these programs must be enhanced.

Let's help ensure career success for all of our students.

1 million will expand student career and leadership opportunities offered to FFA members to all 65,000 students enrolled in agricultural education.
