The Wells' Built and Wells Heritage House project will include the preservation of a historic property in the Central Florida area and the digitization of a unique collection of photographs, oral histories, newspapers, correspondence, negatives, and business records that highlight African American life in Orlando. The project will allow architects, historians, sociologists, economists, scholars in African American history and women's studies to uncover information regarding family life, commerce, arts, culture, ethnomusicology and public accommodations in Orlando prior to the passage of the United States 1964 Civil Rights Act. The Wells' Built is listed on the National Register of Historic Places and is the "little hotel in Parramore" referenced in author Gilbert King's 2012 Pulitzer Prize Winning book, Devil in the Grove. The Wells' Built was formerly an African American owned hotel listed in the Negro Motorists Green Book published by Victor Green & Company of New York with sponsorship from Esso and the Ford Motor Company. Devil in the Grove shines a spotlight on the difficulty Thurgood Marshall and his legal team experienced when they sought hotel accommodations in Central Florida in 1949 during the defense of four young black men in Groveland, Florida. They were unable to find any establishment in nearby Lake County that would rent to 'Negroes' and consequently, using the Green Book as a reference, they traveled to the neighboring county of Orange and found lodging at a "little hotel in Parramore-the black section of Orlando". The Wells' Built is also featured in the Civics textbook for middle school students in Florida.
